DESCRIPTION

Are you planning to sustain your program or coalition, but are struggling with where to start? Have you tried to sustain, but the process did not go as planned? Are you ready to set your team up for sustainability success? Setting up for sustainability success starts with understanding what sustainability is, what factors affect it, and how it applies to your project. This webinar will outline the key components that make up sustainability and the factors that affect sustainability. These factors include funding/resources, but we know that while funding may be necessary, it is not sufficient to achieve sustainability. This webinar focuses directly on the myriad of other factors that affect sustainability success and how you can strategically use this information to begin developing a sustainability plan to address them.

PRESENTER

Julia E. Moore is the Senior Director at the Center for Implementation. Dr. Moore has a PhD from Penn State in Human Development and Family Studies, where she researched the best ways to implement evidence-based prevention programs. Dr. Moore is most passionate about supporting professionals and organizations in using implementation science. She has worked on over 75 implementation projects and delivered dozens of workshops and webinars to over 1000 professionals.
